Using her studies in photography and business classes at UCR, Taylor launched a social media movement that empowers young people of color to love themselves. After her younger sister was bullied for her dark skin tone, Taylor took a photo of her sister and posted it on Twitter with a phrase their grandmother taught them. That phrase-turned-campaign gained support from stars like Alicia Keys, Lupita Nyong’o, LeBron James, and Whoopi Goldberg. The sisters now run a nonprofit foundation that addresses matters which affect our world.

DIVERSITY

Diversity is not an abstract concept at UC Riverside — it is a source of strength and pride for our campus. Not only is our student body diverse, but so is our senior leadership. 40% are women. Many are first-generation college graduates. Several were born outside of the United States. We are also well-represented by a variety of faith traditions and members of the LGBTQ+ and military communities. Our awareness of and focus on inclusion reflects a historical commitment to the value and strength diversity brings to our campus.

MAHMOUD HEMOOD
FOURTH-YEAR (BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION MAJOR)

Founder of Baba’s Chicken

During his third year at UCR, Mahmoud opened a successful downtown Riverside eatery that celebrates his love for hot chicken sandwiches. Best part? All UCR students get a discount! Proof that Highlanders really do take care of other Highlanders.

“The lessons here at UCR are very well worth it. Many of the concepts I learned in business helped me save a lot of money, such as inventory control methods, employee management strategies, branding, and marketing. Companies pay a lot of money in hiring people to solve these problems for them, yet here at UCR, we are given that knowledge without recognizing its true value. Part of being the new generation is that we can use concepts that have been around for many years in a much more creative way.”
Finding and making lifelong friends among UCR’s diverse Highlanders is an everyday thing thanks to the 500+ student organizations offered. With a student body of over 25,000 people, comes limitless passions, interests, and curiosities that will encourage the real you. Build on your strengths by surrounding yourself with likeminded people, or challenge your growth by exposing your mind to new ways of thinking.
