VULNERABILITY, DISTRUST

• How You May Feel: That you’re at the mercy of your own emotions or the actions of others; unsure of who to trust or how to trust yourself; suspicious and cautious.

• What You Can Do: Trust your instincts in regards to who you want to talk with about what happened to you. Try to talk with people whom you have found to be the most dependable in the past, select those who have been good listeners and non-judgmental. Feelings of general suspicion may subside as you begin to find people you can trust.

SEXUAL FEARS

• How You May Feel: That you don’t want to have sexual relations; wondering whether you will ever want or enjoy sexual relationships again; fearful that being sexually intimate will not be consensual.

• What You Can Do: Try to tell your partner what your limits are. Let your partner know if the situation reminds you of the assault and may bring up painful memories. Let your partner know that it’s the situation, not them, that’s bringing up the painful memories. Let your partner know what level of intimacy feels comfortable for you, you may feel more comfortable with gentle physical affection.

ANGER

• How You May Feel: Angry at the abuser and/or stalker; thinking about retaliation; angry at the world since you no longer feel safe.

• What You Can Do: Be accepting of your anger. Feeling angry toward the person who harmed you doesn’t mean that you’re a violent or bad person — you have the right to feel angry about the violation(s) you have experienced. You may want to talk to people who understand these feelings.

DISRUPTION OF DAILY ACTIVITIES

• How You May Feel: Preoccupied with intrusive thoughts about the unhealthy and/or abusive behavior; unable to concentrate; having nightmares, sleep disturbances and/or changes in appetite; experiencing “startle reactions,” phobias, general anxiety or depression; triggering of memories of a prior crisis or trauma.

• What You Can Do: Although these are common reactions, they can be quite disturbing. Take things very slowly. Some people find it helpful to keep a notebook on hand to write down feelings, thoughts, ideas or details of what occurred or is occurring. Keeping your thoughts and feelings in one place may make them feel more manageable.

SHOCK AND NUMBNESS

• How You May Feel: Confused, easily overwhelmed, unsure of how to feel or what to do, spacy or out of it.

• What You Can Do: Be aware that these are normal reactions to trauma and abuse. Each person handles crisis differently, so think of things that helped you get through crises in the past. Get help to sort out what you would like to do and how you may want to organize your time, thoughts and decisions. Be compassionate toward yourself and give yourself time to heal from past and/or ongoing abuse.

LOSS OF CONTROL

• How You May Feel: Like your whole life has been turned upside down and that you will never have control of your life again; like your thoughts and feelings are out of control.

• What You Can Do: Ask how other people have handled similar situations. Try to make as many of your own decisions as possible, even over small things such as where you want eat, a book you want to read or music you want to listen to. This may help you gradually regain a sense of control over your life.

GUILT AND SELF-BLAME

• How You May Feel: Like you could have or should have done something to avoid or prevent the abuse and unhealthy behaviors; doubtful of your ability to make good judgments.

• What You Can Do: No matter what the situation was, you did not ask to be hurt or violated. Blaming yourself is sometimes a way to feel control over the situation, thinking that if you avoid similar circumstances, it will not happen to you again. Talk to someone about the situation and remind yourself that it wasn’t your fault.

ISOLATION

• How You May Feel: That this experience has set you apart from other people; that other people can tell you are or have been in an unhealthy relationship, or are experiencing stalking just by looking at you; not wanting to burden other people with your experience.

• What You Can Do: Healing from intimate partner violence or stalking can be a very lonely experience, however, you are not alone in what you are feeling. You may find it reassuring to talk to others who have experienced this or to a CARE advocate who has worked with other relationship violence and stalking survivors.

FEAR

• How You May Feel: Fear that the abuser and/or stalker may return; fear for your general physical safety; fear of being alone; fear of other people or situations that may remind you of the assault.
The Cycle of Violence is used to describe a cyclical pattern of behavior that may occur in unhealthy and/or abusive relationships. The more that someone experiences the cycle in a relationship, the more “normal” an unhealthy relationship can feel and leaving can become difficult. The cycle can occur several times and can be one of the many reasons why someone may stay in an unhealthy relationship. Many individuals feel there’s hope that their partner will change or that the relationship will get better. Regardless of the reason, understanding how the cycle works can help in processing and understanding what someone may be experiencing.

It is important to be aware that many relationships do not begin abusive and/ or unhealthy. Experiencing the happy “honeymoon” phase is quite common and/ or unhealthy. Experiencing the happy “honeymoon” phase is quite common. It is important to be aware that many relationships do not begin abusive and/ or unhealthy. Experiencing the happy “honeymoon” phase is quite common. It is important to be aware that many relationships do not begin abusive and/ or unhealthy. Experiencing the happy “honeymoon” phase is quite common. It is important to be aware that many relationships do not begin abusive and/ or unhealthy. Experiencing the happy “honeymoon” phase is quite common. It is important to be aware that many relationships do not begin abusive and/ or unhealthy. Experiencing the happy “honeymoon” phase is quite common. It is important to be aware that many relationships do not begin abusive and/ or unhealthy. Experiencing the happy “honeymoon” phase is quite common. It is important to be aware that many relationships do not begin abusive and/ or unhealthy. Experiencing the happy “honeymoon” phase is quite common.

The Cycle of Violence is used to describe a cyclical pattern of behavior that may occur in unhealthy and/or abusive relationships. The more that someone experiences the cycle in a relationship, the more “normal” an unhealthy relationship can feel and leaving can become difficult. The cycle can occur several times and can be one of the many reasons why someone may stay in an unhealthy relationship. Many individuals feel there’s hope that their partner will change or that the relationship will get better. Regardless of the reason, understanding how the cycle works can help in processing and understanding what someone may be experiencing.

It is important to be aware that many relationships do not begin abusive and/ or unhealthy. Experiencing the happy “honeymoon” phase is quite common.