Bringing our whole selves to work

None of us are ONE identity

Not all identities are salient
The strength of specific identities is fluid throughout life

You are not a token
Individuals are not responsible for representing an entire group that shares a particular identity

Ask clarifying questions

Dress code
What is the dress code?
Casual Fridays?
Dressing for your schedule?

Boundaries
Are there defined office hours?
Open door policy/shared space?
Quiet time?

Communication
What are the expectations?
Preferred methods?
Zoom calls - video on?

Professionalism is situational

Dress code

Safety first
If you work in a lab or field setting, dress according to safety recommendations

Focus on fit
No matter your style or store, look for tops and bottoms that fit you well

Comfort is key
Discomfort in your clothes can be distracting, both to yourself and your colleagues – find options that make you feel your best so you can do your best
Case Study

Mia is a Creative Writing major at UCR and is in their second week as a social media intern with the County of Orange. Last week, Mia’s supervisor shared that today they would be in and out of meetings, however Mia has a question about a task they are working on. At noon, Mia notices that their supervisor is in their office alone. How should Mia approach the situation?
Professionalism is Responsibility

Building credibility

Be realistic about timelines
Avoid over-promising on how quickly you can accomplish a task
If you find yourself needing more time, it's ok to ask

Follow through on responsibilities
If you say you'll take something on, commit to completing it
Give yourself time to learn your new role before taking on extra projects

Ask for support when you need it
You don't have to know everything right away
Ask clarifying questions or seek input from colleagues if needed

Using sick/vacation/personal time
Be mindful of work cycle and who will cover for you on sick time
Determine notification preferences when asking and/or notifying other staff

You are what you do, not what you say you'll do.
Dear Taylor,

Thank you for meeting with me yesterday. I wanted to see if you were available sometime this week to discuss plans on how we plan to get to the marketing meeting. My car is getting serviced and I wanted to discuss other transportation options in case my car isn't ready. I am available tomorrow at 12pm but let me know what time works for you this week. Feel free to email or call me at (555) 553 – 2345. Thank you.

Sincerely,

Courtney

Professionalism is responsibility
Brand in meetings (phone, video, or in-person)

Prepare ahead of time
If you know the agenda ahead of time, know what you hope to share or learn through the conversation.

Gather the necessary information
Name, contact information, reason for reaching out, and next steps following the conversation.

Texting
Communicate as you would in an e-mail, unless your supervisor or organization allow for more casual conversations.

Punctuality
Arrive on time or slightly before to avoid falling behind schedule, and avoid going longer than the pre-scheduled time.

Follow up
Many meetings end with some action items and timelines – stick to these as well as you can.

Acknowledge mistakes
If you’re late, miss a deadline, or mispronounce someone’s name, remember than no one is perfect! Acknowledge the error and focus on doing better next time.
Case Study

James is a Mechanical Engineering major at UCR and just started their internship with Northrop Grumman in the Space Systems Group. James has a class assignment that is due tomorrow and James noticed that they have an hour of free time within their shift. Should James work on their class assignment during internship hours or utilize this free time to connect with a colleague in a role that James is interested in pursuing post-grad? Why?
Professionalism is Behavior
Professionalism is behavior

On the job

It's not what you say, but how you say it
When communicating feelings and attitudes, 7% of the message is conveyed by the words spoken, 38% from the tone of voice used, and 55% from body language.*

Put away distractions
Cell phone, food, side conversations

Balance contributions
Ask questions, provide input, and leave space for others to do the same
If you notice a colleague (or yourself) is frequently spoken over, redirect the conversation back

Professionalism is behavior
Work events, parties, social media

Being Social at Work
You may be invited and decide to attend social events through work – be mindful of your behaviors (alcohol, disclosing information you would not in the workplace, utilizing the space to discuss work when not appropriate)

How Others Perceive You Digitally
Be cognizant of your social media privacy settings, who you are connected to, what you are sharing
Utilize your social media platforms wisely/differently, do not feel like you need to open up all platforms to your colleagues

Being Inclusive
These types of events tend to show how you engage with others naturally in conversation
Be wary of being "cliquey" and find ways to intentionally include others, get to know the people you work with!

Professionalism is Competence
Professionalism is Competence
Doing your best work and being your best self

Being Reliable
Do not always rely on other team members to answer hardest questions or do the heaviest lifting on projects and offer support when you have the capacity to do so.

Seeking Professional Development
You are worthy of further development and your company should afford you opportunities to do so!
Seek out possibilities and describe to your team/supervisors why this is important to your work.

Clarifying Expectations
Know what is expected of you and your work when you start a new role, function, or project - this will enable you to showcase your strengths effectively and keep everyone on the same page.
